THREE POWERS. ONE FRONTIER.

Rex Fleet

Green Corridor

The Shattering broke the fast routes connecting settled worlds.

Generations learned to survive journeys measured in months and years.

Now a newly reblazed crossing makes Auric reachable again.

A Verge freighter is preparing to take it.

LUMINARA FIELDS — MORNING
Local reserves stay sealed. The Auric load goes on this freighter.
Keep hold of your bag. The passenger line's moving.
Will Auric have better rooms than here?
That's what we're going to find out.
Are the Shards going to stop the ship?
The escorts know the crossing. Come on.

KALDR RIFT — GREEN CORRIDOR APPROACH
Last beacon's green. Timing agrees across the line.
Ride the inversion to the exit mark. Then slow the convoy before the wreck field.
Thunderbreak wants the exposed flank.
Let the Thunderbreak have it then. At least they asked first.

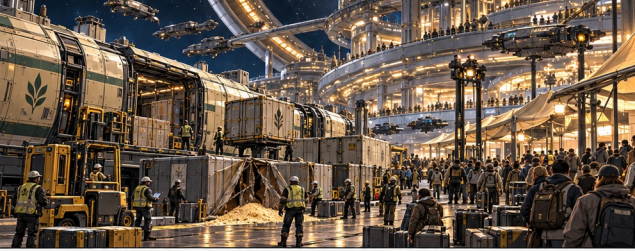

Something is behind that wreck. Are we detecting Shard ships?
Almost like they knew we were coming. How?
The fleet is telling us to fall behind the Thunderbreak.
Oh? They're not asking this time? Tell them we know this approach better than they do. so they can kiss our flank.
Captain Sol says she's staying in the lead, -please- protect us from the rear.
Two contacts accelerating. They're not after the escort.
Warn the cargo master. Seal the holds now.

Two cutters breaking cover. Both heading for the grain ship's cargo collars.
We're too far aft to block them. That wreck's just off our port bow.
Helm, match the wreck's drift. Use our port bow to ease it into their path.
We'll scrape the plating.
Damage control, stand by. Helm, take us in.

GRAIN FREIGHTER — PASSENGER ACCESS
Cargo only. Stay out of the passenger section.
Hold still. I need this seal tight.
I don't know. Stay behind me.
Are they taking our grain?
Passenger compartment sealed. Keep clear of the cargo hatch.

KALDR RIFT — MINUTES LATER
Three containers taken. The cutters are withdrawing. We could catch one, but we'd leave the freighter.
Then we stay. Keep the freighter covered.
The boarding collar's damaged. Another container split when they pulled free.
Passenger pressure's holding. I'll take them to Auric.
I'll cover your aft quarter. Watch the wreck field.

AURIC BAZAAR — EVENING
Three containers taken. One split. No one lost from the freighter.
Keep the damage report with the Verge cargo manifest.
It's bigger than the pictures.
It is. Let's find where we're sleeping.

Fleet protected the ship. It didn't insure the cargo.
Count what's actually docked. No distribution promises until we know.
Three containers stolen and another damaged. Traders at both ends of the route will feel that.

We came here because there'd be room to work and live.

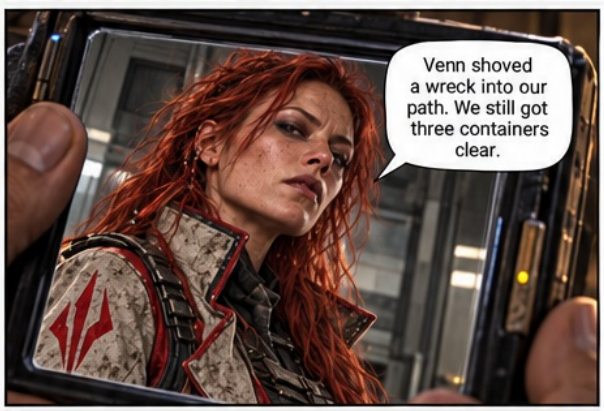

Register tonight. We'll get you inside, but the queues are real.

And the out-ring's heating allotment is already behind.

Open the civic warming room. I'll take the council complaints in the morning.

I gave you the crossing time. That freighter came back with its cargo collar torn open.

Venn shoved a wreck into our path. We still got three containers clear.

And split a fourth. Two merchants have already postponed their next runs.

Those three containers are going home to people who need them.

Not much use if next week's grain stays in port.

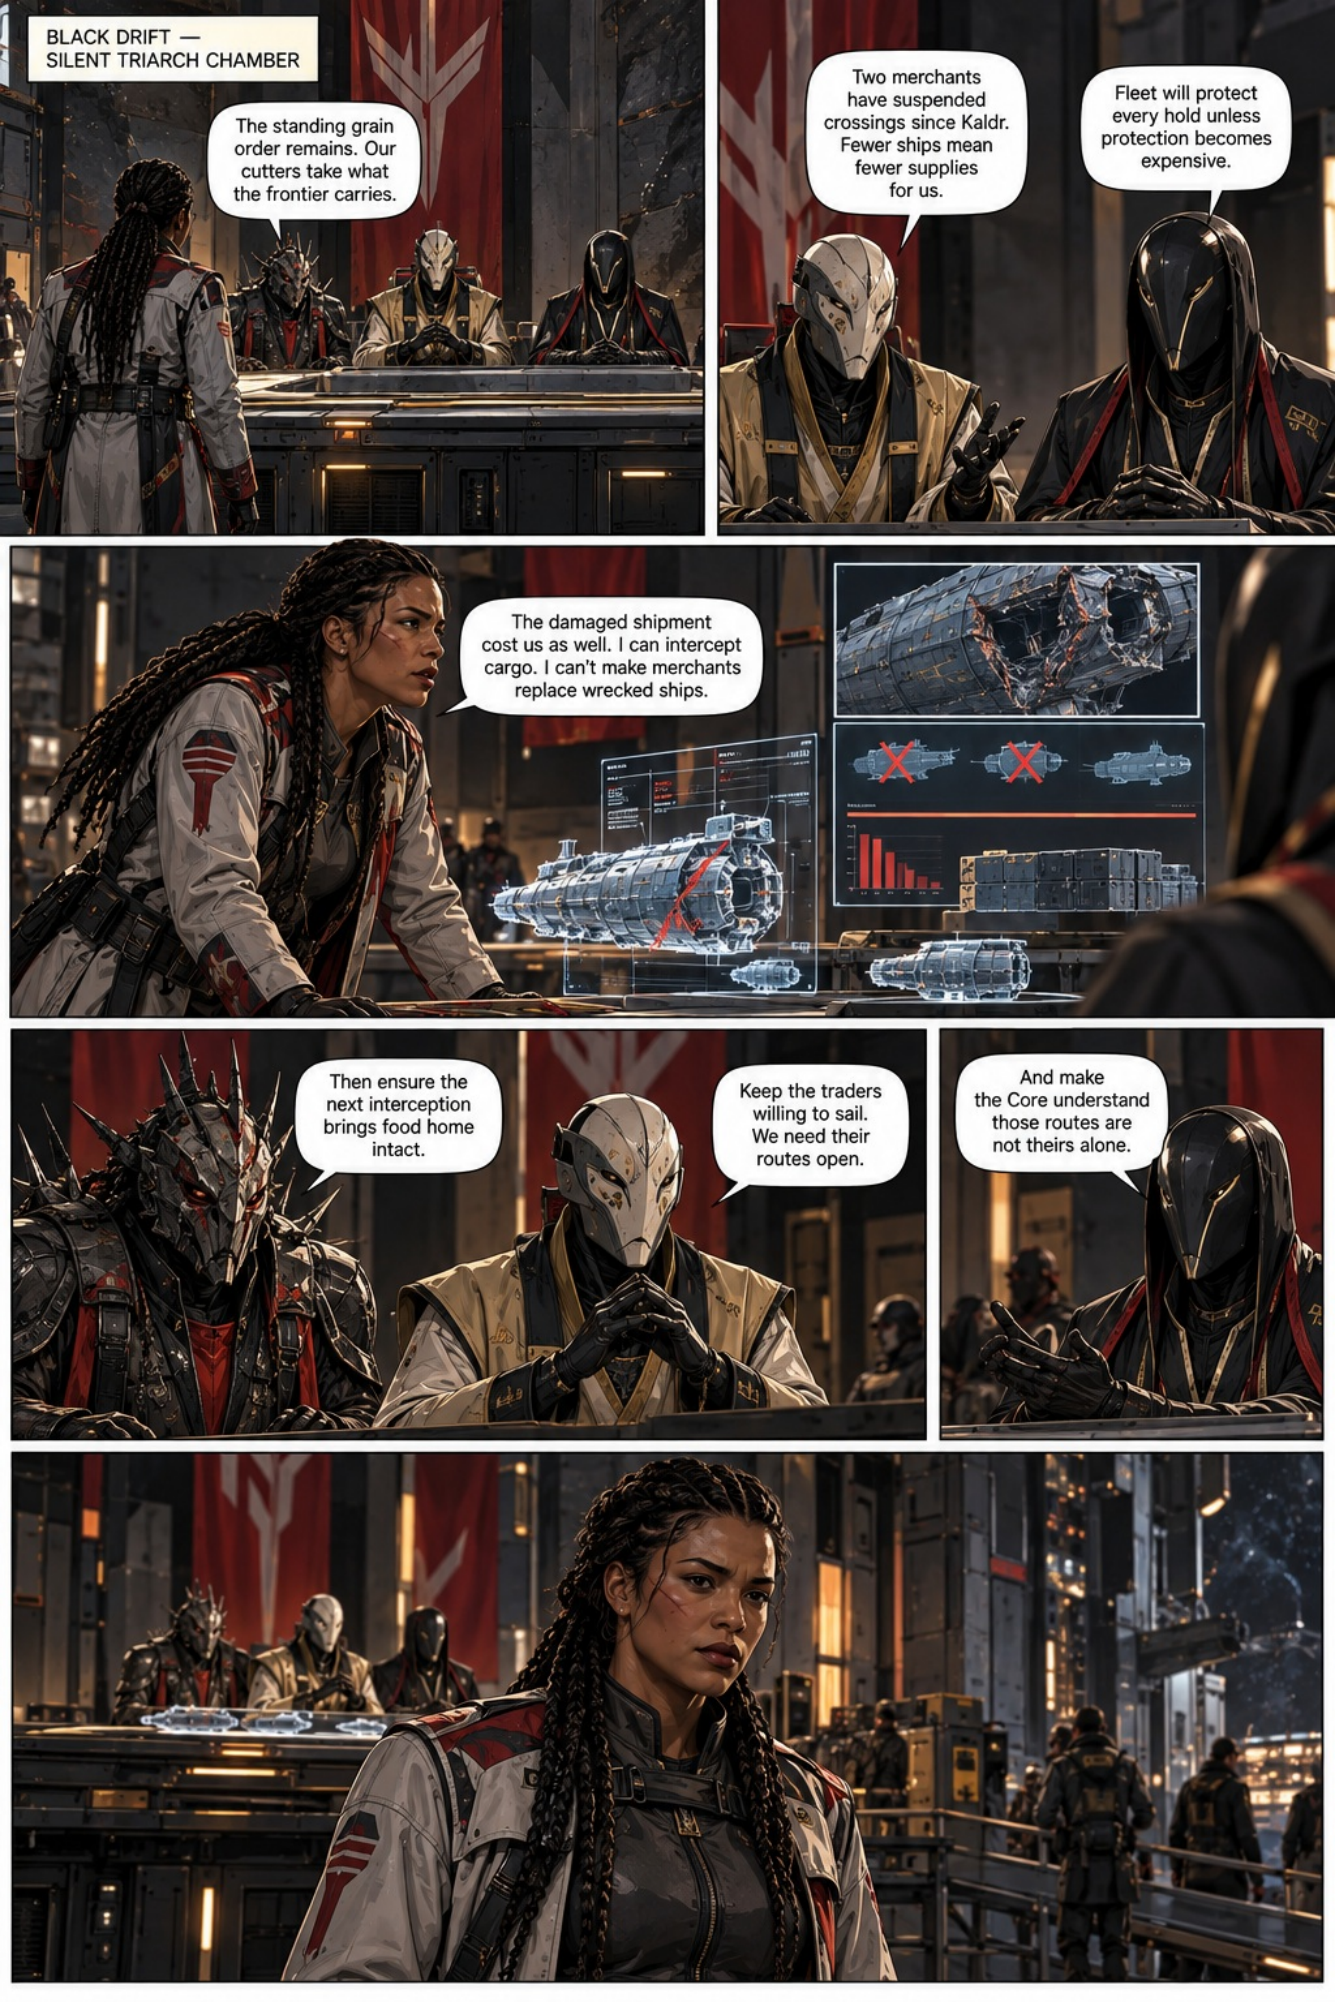

Then talk to the merchants. I decide where my cutters fly.

BLACK DRIFT — FOLLOWING SHIFT
Ashfang's port collar is torn through. We can patch it, but not before the next shift.
Unload the grain first. Families are waiting at the ration point.
We got three containers past Thunderbreak.
And lost the others when the hold broke. That wasn't all Fleet's doing.
Three containers won't last. We need merchants willing to make the next crossing.
I want enough that our people won't be waiting on their next convoy.

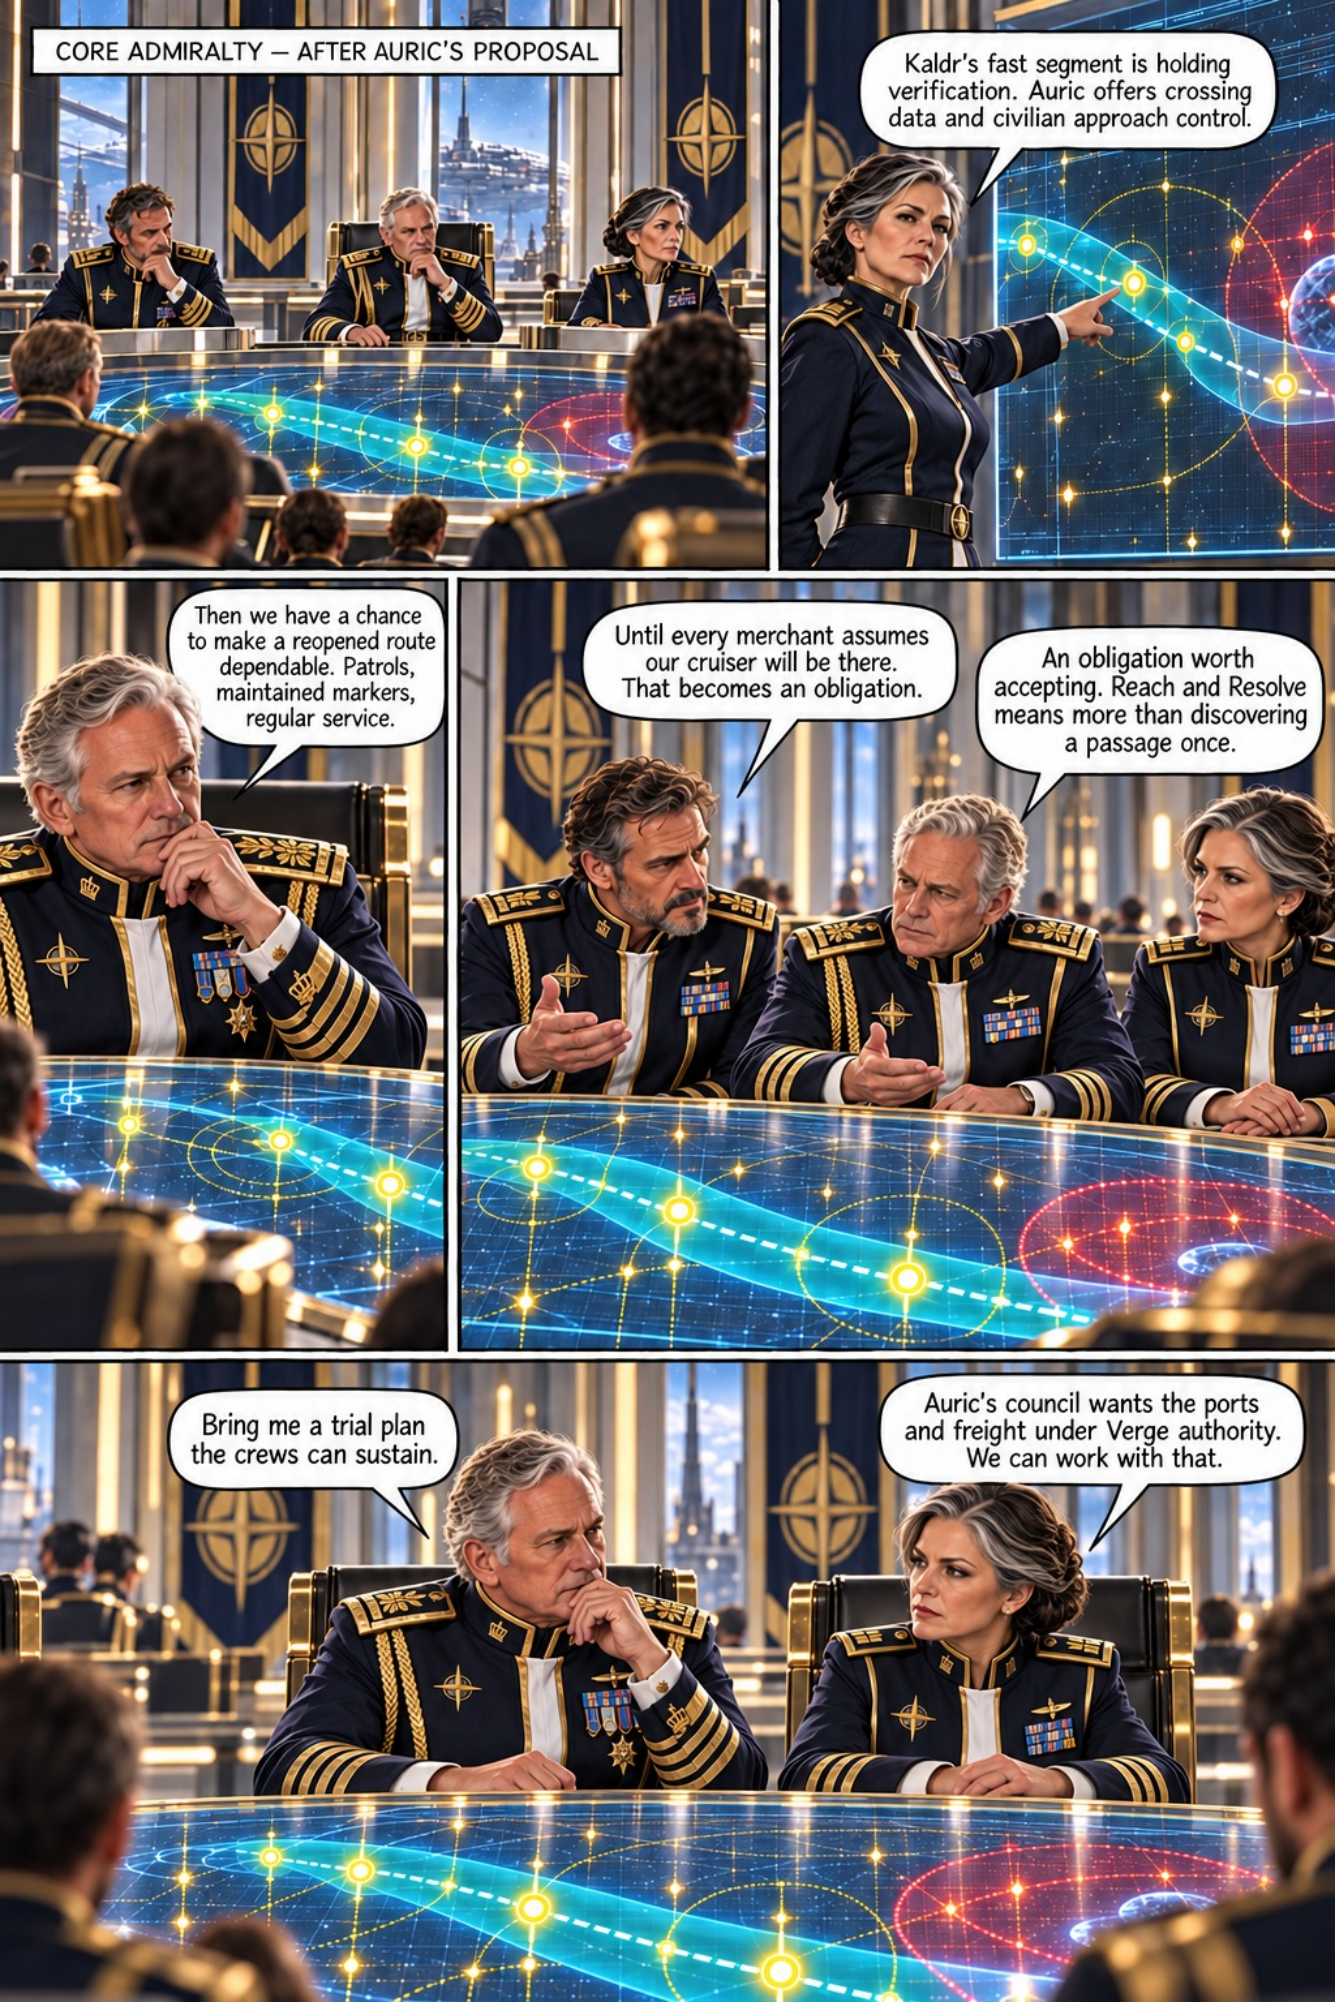

The ration crew wants the last container now. If we stop repairs, Ashfang misses the convoy after next.
Use the cargo lift while the weld cools. Keep the pressure frame braced until Tessa signs it off.
That frame goes back under load too soon, the collar tears open again.
Another crossing means another Fleet ship between us and dinner.
Then we need the collar intact and enough grain left for people who can't board a cutter.

Ashfang's collar survived your landing. Barely.
It survived. Three containers made it home.
And two traders just pushed their next departures back.
We may end up repairing the same hole for an empty dock.
What if they could bring a share here without us intercepting them?
And thank Fleet for letting us eat? That's a hard bargain to sell.
I didn't say I could sell it.
Good. I've still got an actual collar to fix. Hand me that brace.

BLACK DRIFT — SILENT TRIARCH CHAMBER
The standing grain order remains. Our cutters take what the frontier carries.
Two merchants have suspended crossings since Kaldr. Fewer ships mean fewer supplies for us.
Fleet will protect every hold unless protection becomes expensive.
The damaged shipment cost us as well. I can intercept cargo. I can't make merchants replace wrecked ships.
Then ensure the next interception brings food home intact.
Keep the traders willing to sail. We need their routes open.
And make the Core understand those routes are not theirs alone.

AURIC BAZAAR — NEXT MORNING
Traders who took months to reach us could make regular runs. That changes everything.
Including how many ships we have to bring safely through the approach.
The corridor will bring customers and workers. We need both.
We already have new arrivals sleeping beside the heat vents.
And those workers need somewhere warm to sleep. Send the housing figures to the council before we promise more berths.
I'll give you the route conditions. Don't sign away Verge traffic control to get an escort.

Once ships exit the fast segment, Verge traffic control takes the approach. That's not negotiable.
Our pilots know the inversion, Fleet can certify markers and keep the cutters off it.
They'll want a lasting assignment once trade depends on it.
Fleet patrols the route. We keep the ports, freight and civilian crossing order.
Then the council will have to decide what that costs. Send Venn the proposed terms.

CORE ADMIRALTY — AFTER AURIC'S PROPOSAL
Kaldr's fast segment is holding verification. Auric offers crossing data and civilian approach control.
Then we have a chance to make a reopened route dependable. Patrols, maintained markers, regular service.
Until every merchant assumes our cruiser will be there. That becomes an obligation.
An obligation worth accepting. Reach and Resolve means more than discovering a passage once.
Bring me a trial plan the crews can sustain.
Auric's council wants the ports and freight under Verge authority. We can work with that.

Authorize the Kaldr trial. Maintain the markers and deploy an escort once Thunderbreak is ready.
Port-bow repairs come first. Auric gets the written conditions before the next convoy.
A trial can become a permanent obligation faster than we can supply it.
Then we judge its value honestly. People have spent generations traveling the slow way.
Agreed. Keep that route open if the measurements allow it.

BLACK DRIFT — AFTER THE KALDR AUTHORIZATION
The merchants are scheduling again. Gravefire's ready when you two are.
More crossings, more chances to bring grain home. Keep it intact.
And more Fleet guns watching every move.
You don't need me to tell you what happened to Ashfang's collar.
No. Tess has mentioned it once or twice.
If you're both finished borrowing my tools, I'd like them back.
Give her the tools, Billie. We've got ships to ready.

EDITOR'S LETTER

THE FRONTIER AHEAD

Three powers share one frontier. When the Green Corridor opens, Naomi Sol guides a freighter of families toward a future they thought out of reach. A Shard cutter shadows them. Commodore Ella Venn sends the Fleet to protect the passage—an act of rescue to some, a claim of power to others.

Naomi wants her passengers to arrive with their choices intact. Ella must decide where protection ends and command begins. At Black Drift, Abby, Billie, and Tessa prepare another raid. The cargo could feed their families; Fleet expansion is turning old allies against each other.

Rex Fleet is about the people caught between survival, security, and home.

As routes reopen, neighbors become strangers, rivals become uneasy allies, > and every choice changes who gets to move—and who is left behind.

THE SHATTERING	GENERATIONS APART	THE CORRIDORS REOPEN
Fast routes fail. Worlds lose contact.	People build lives across a slower, divided frontier.	New passages reconnect distant communities—and reopen old rivalries.

A NOTE FROM STAR SPLITTER VISIONS

Yes, it's AI. Why? Because it was fun to put together. I wanted to imagine people with competing needs, put them on a frontier full of choices, and see what happened. Thanks for coming along.
